Fabian Lawrence, New Oxford R. D., whose car struck Donald Reel, local service station operator, and his daughters while they were crossing Center square at Carlisle street May 21, was sentenced to 120 days in the county jail and ordered to pay $100 and the costs by Judge W. C. Sheely in court today.

He had pleaded guilty to a charge of drunken driving, and the sentence was on that charge. Judge Sheely, after hearing that Lawrence had been arrested twice previously on drunken driving offenses, told Lawrence that "you are fortunate that you are not before the court on a manslaughter or even a second degree murder charge." Lawrence passed a car which had stopped on the square to permit pedestrians to cross and had driven into a line of pedestrians, hitting Reel and two of his daughters.

USES SPRAYER TO CHECK FIRE

An orchard sprayer and quick thinking on the part of Donald Fetters, Gardner R. D., prevented more serious damage as fire completely destroyed a chicken house on the farm of his father, C. L. Fetters, in Menallen township, near Aspers, last week.

Fetters was visiting his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph May, who are tenants on the farm. Mrs. May was burning a brush pile. Fire suddenly followed the grass to an empty 15 by 60 feet chicken house which burst into flames immediately.

Seeing the danger of fire spreading to other buildings and realizing there was no time to call for fire trucks, Fetters quickly maneuvered a large sprayer into a position where he could cover the other buildings with water. Although the chicken house was totally destroyed his quick action saved all other buildings on the property.

The chicken house was partly covered by insurance.

A New Oxford fisherman who parked his car Saturday on a nearby road while he went fishing in the Big Conewago creek faced a traffic charge after York state police decided the car helped cause two accidents and damage of $600 to four automobiles including that of the angler.

No one was injured. State policemen said the fisherman, C. Ralph Hart, 64, parked his car on a road about a mile east of East Berlin about 50 feet from the Big Conewago, and went fishing. The car was headed west and was parked on the north side of the road with both left wheels about one foot on the paved portion of the road, police claimed.

Two cars going in opposite directions met to pass each other at about 11 a. m. during a rainstorm, officers said, and one got by the Hart car. The other, driven by Emory W. Sell, Jr., 42, East Berlin, hit the fisherman's car, skidded 50 feet and turned over on its side.

BROOKLYN USES HOMERS TO WIN PAIR FROM REDS

By RALPH RODEN
(AP Sports Writer)

Something new has been added to the Brooklyn Dodgers' stock in trade—a home run punch.

Dodger batters have belted 55 homers in 52 games. Only the slumped New York Giants have a higher total, 57. Last year the Dodgers hammered only 91 balls out of sight in 153 games.

The lone fly in the ointment is that Dodger pitchers have allowed even more home runs than the Brooks have hit. They've served up 56 four-baggers.

Highest Score of Season
Brooklyn's new found medium of winning games played havoc with Cincinnati over the week-end. The league-leaders socked two homers in a 10-5 win Friday night, belted three more in an 11-3 victory Saturday and yesterday exploded four in a pulverizing 20-7 rout that stretched their unbeaten streak to seven games. The 20 runs were the most scored in one game by a major league team this season.

Gil Hodges and Billy Cox were the chief noisemakers. Each slammed a pair of homers. Hodges drove home eight runs and Cox six in the 13-hit rampage against seven Red pitchers.

Both the second-place St. Louis Cardinals and the third-place Boston Braves fell two games back of the Dodgers as they split double-headers.

Cards, Phils Divide
The Cards divided with the Philadelphia Phillies, winning the opener, 7-3, and dropping the nightcap, 8-3. The Braves split with the Chicago Cubs, copping the second game, 2-0, after losing the first, 6-2.

Harry (Cat) Brecheen stopped the Phils in the first game on five hits and would have had a shutout but for Andy Seminick who tagged a three-run first inning homer.

Seminick carried his home run bat into the finale, blasting two into the seats and driving home four runs to make Robin Roberts' seventh victory a breeze.

14th for Kiner
The Cubs combined a five-run first inning against Johnny Sain and brilliant pitching by Rookie Warren Hacker to upset the Braves in the first game. Hacker allowed only one hit after taking over from Johnny Schmitz in the first inning with none out.

Johnny Antonelli, 19-year-old bonus lefthander, outpitched 39-year-old Dutch Leonard in the second game. Antonelli permitted only four singles, fanned five and walked one batter.

Ralph Kiner smashed his 14th home run of the season in the seventh inning to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 6-5 nod over the New York Giants.

Indians Take Two
The World Champion Cleveland Indians won a twin bill from the New York Yankees 6-0 and 3-1, at Cleveland before 75,543 fans, largest major league crowd of the season. The defeats cut the Yanks' edge over the runner-up Detroit Tigers to three games. The Tigers swept a bargain bill from the Washington Senators, 9-0 and 6-5.

Bob Lemon shut out the Yanks in six blows and walloped a two-run homer in besting Lefty Ed Lopat in the opener. The whitewash was the first suffered by the Yanks in 113 games.

Rookie Mike Garcia came up with a three-hitter in the nightcap that was called in the Cleveland eighth because of wet grounds.

Prince Hal Newhouse let the Senators down with four hits in turning in his first shutout and seventh victory of the year in the opener at Detroit. The second game was a squeaker that the Tigers won in the ninth when rookie Johnny Groth slammed a bases-loaded double off Paul Calvert.

Athletics Split
Boston's Red Sox pulled into a fourth-place tie with the Nats, a half game back of the third-place Philadelphia Athletics by downing the Chicago White Sox twice, 15-3 and 7-5.

Home runs by Birdie Tebbets, Vern Stephens and Bobby Doerr permitted Lefty Mel Parnell to coast to his eighth triumph in the first game. Stephens' homer was his 15th, high for both leagues. The Sox won the second game with a three-run blast in the ninth.

Philadelphia split with the last-place St. Louis Browns, taking the second game, 13-10 after losing the first, 6-4. The A's hammered six Brownie pitchers for 19 hits in the finale, ten of them for extra bases.

100 WOMEN "BURNED UP"
Uniontown, Pa., June 13 (AP)—Approximately 100 "burned up" women are going to protest today against "odoriferous smoke" given off by burning trash at the city's incinerator dump. The irate housewives halted garbage collection in Uniontown for two days and plan to picket the incinerator plant today to further demonstrate their ire.

Despite being held to but two hits, Heidersburg edged Hunterstown 4-3 in a contest staged at Heidersburg. Hunterstown rallied for a pair of runs in the ninth but could not push over the tying tally.

Cashtown retained its grip on third place by outslugging Green Springs on the Cashtown diamond 10-6.

In another close battle New Oxford triumphed 2-1 over Granite at New Oxford.

A trio of errors was largely responsible for Bonneauville's 3-2 reverse at the hands of Brushtown in a game played at Brushtown.

Out Of The Past

From the Files of the Star and Sentinel and
The Gettysburg Times

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO

The Celebrated Gen. Tom Thumb intends visiting our place May 31st and June 1st. His first levee will be at the Court-House on Thursday afternoon. We had the pleasure of conversing with the General at Philadelphia, before he went to Europe, and were quite interested in the "little man." He is now about 17 years old, 28 inches high and 15 pounds in weight. He is a hero, for he has kissed and been kissed by more ladies in this country and in Europe without flinching than any other man in the world. In this particular Henry Clay and Gen. Taylor are pigmies in comparison with him. He personates Frederick the Great, and Napoleon Bonaparte, appears in tableaux representing the Grecian Statues—dresses as a sailor, and dances a horn-pipe to perfection, and then comes out as an English Fox-Hunter. . . . Everyone will go to see the hero, the first to look at the man who has kissed a million of ladies and the last to be kissed by the irresistible hero who has saluted every member of the fair sex from Queen Victoria down and on, who has come within the magic circle of his charms.

(The General is attended by his Father and Mother, a Pianist Preceptor—groom, coachman, footman, etc. making in all a retinue of eleven persons.

Admission, 25 cents; children under 10 years, half-price).

Married: On Tuesday, at Canaan, New York, by the Rev. J. Wickes, Mr. James F. Fahnestock, of this place, to Miss Sarah G. daughter of J. A. Lord, Esq., of Canaan, N. Y.

Melancholy Event: Mr. Leander Criswell, a very worthy young man, residing four miles below this place, on the York turnpike, aged 20 years, met his death on Monday evening in a sudden and painful manner. He was engaged in felling a tree, a limb of which struck him on the head. He was able to walk home, but in a short time became seriously unwell, and in eight hours expired in convulsions. He was the principal support of his widowed mother.

SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO
On Thursday George, aged about 6 years, son of Mr. William Chritzman of this place, while cutting grass with a butcher knife cut off the tip of his left hand thumb.

The Common Schools of this place will close on Friday, when the term of nine months will be completed. The schools on the lower floor will have their usual closing exercises on Friday morning and those on the upper floor on Friday afternoon.

Nellie Grant's Wedding: The great event at Washington on Thursday was the marriage of Miss Nellie Grant, daughter of the President, to Mr. Sartoris, of England. The ceremony took place in the East Room of the White House, the Rev. Dr. Tiffany, pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church, officiating. About two hundred friends of the President and his family were present. The young couple sailed for Liverpool on Saturday in the steamship Baltic, of the White Star line.

Washington telegrams describe the wedding: The bridal party passing through the Blue Room, entered the East Room. Their presence immediately hushed the company to silence. The approach was announced by music from the Marine Band. First came Mr. Sartoris and Col. Frederick Grant, the only groomsmen. Next the bridesmaids, two by two, the President and Miss Grant, and Mrs. Grant and her two sons, Ulysses and Jesse. These were followed by relatives of the family. On reaching the platform, the President transferred his daughter to Mr. Sartoris, who, with the bride, ascended the platform, where the officiating minister was waiting to receive them, and took position under a floral wedding veil. The President and Colonel Grant, together with Miss Barnes, one of the bridesmaids, were the only other persons in nearness to the bridal pair on the platform. Mrs. Grant and her two boys standing in front, and seven

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

ANOTHER FRIEND GONE
Someone has said that every time we lose a friend we lose a part of ourselves. I believe that this is true, for something of the spirit of us seems to have gone out at such a time. We are lonelier and bereft of that precious thing which we call friendship, something that we can ill afford to lose, with so little of it in the world.

I was stunned at the news of the death of my old friend Robert ("Believe-It-Or-Not") Ripley. It was in 1912 that I was engaged to come to New York and organize a special newspaper syndicate for a group of great newspapers. I had hardly got under way with my task when a shy young boy from San Francisco came in with a bunch of sporting drawings under his arm. The drawings were unusual and the writing accompanying them was excellent. I immediately engaged him at $60.00 a week on a two-year contract. That chap was Bob Ripley, and he never failed to express his gratitude for that act.

Later, sponsored by King Features in the Hearst organization, he rose to rapid fame, with fabulous earnings, but he never made you conscious of the fact. He was modest and he wore a perennial smile.

Bob Ripley probably would have remained a fine cartoonist in sporting matters and a prominent writer on sports, had not one of those rare things happened that often open the door to fame and affluence. He ran out of an idea for a cartoon one day, and had to scurry in his mind for one. It came and he headed it "Believe It Or Not." That was the beginning. He took advantage of the interest aroused, traveled the earth for unique ideas, and up to the time of his death was probably known by more people over the earth than any other cartoonist who ever lived.

People who knew Bob Ripley intimately—and I did—prized his friendship, his loyalty and his sincerity. No one ever begrudged him his success and wide fame. He took it all as a part of the day's work, and without boast. Millions of newspaper readers will miss his unique creations, but he will be missed most by his intimate group of friends and associates.

Bob Ripley loved to have his friends about him—at his unique museum of a home, at his apartment in the city, or for a cruise on his Chinese Junk. He loved people. His career is another example of a chap who took advantage of an idea and did something with it to the enjoyment and profit of millions. We shall not forget him.

Tomorrow Mr. Adams will talk on the subject: "Control and Confidence."

EVERGREENS ON TRIMMING LIST

This is the season to give evergreens a shearing if you want to make them more dense.

Needle evergreens are grouped according to the way they produce leaves. Spruce, fir (Abies) and Douglas fir (Pseudotsuga) produce their needles singly. The method of pruning these is to cut back about half of each new twig that has grown this year. Since these plants produce new buds along the shoot, the ones that remain may start up and thus increase the density. At the same time, this treatment may result in growth of dormant buds at the joints.

Pines have their leaves in bundles of two, three and five. The new shoots of pine do not produce side buds, but if half of each new growth is cut off, dormant buds will start at the joints. The treatment is recommended where Austrian, Scottish or white pines are used in foundation plantings. It is seldom necessary to prune Mugho pine, which is slower growing.

There are a number of evergreens that produce fernlike sprays. These are chamaecyparis or retinospira, arborvitae and hemlock. With pruning shears or even with a sharp sickle about half the new growth may be sheared off, thus causing more plants to grow.

Many persons shear such plants in a formal manner. This form does not fit well, artistically, in the typical home landscape. It is better to leave a somewhat irregular surface, so that a wavy effect is obtained.

Make Garden Air Rights Pay With Cucumber Crop

When garden space is limited, wise home gardeners will exploit the air rights of their holding, and grow on fences, trellises or stakes those vegetable crops that like to climb.

Cucumbers are among these, and any cucumber will be happy climbing a fence, whether it is called a climber or not. Even those with the largest fruits, so heavy you might think they would need support, seldom do.

A season-long crop can be grown with two plantings of an early variety, timed four weeks apart. Plant seeds at the foot of the supporting structure, so that plants will be about a foot apart. Strings should be provided for the early growth to grasp so that the vines are directed in the way they should grow, right from the start.

Because they grow so fast, cucumbers need rich soil. A complete plant food may be applied in a shallow trench three or four inches away from the seed row, using at least a pint to 25 feet of row. To prevent formation of crooked fruit in the late summer, an additional feeding with complete plant food should be made as soon as the plants begin to bear, using at least one pint to fifty feet of row.

Difficulty in growing cucumbers springs mostly from insect enemies, of which the worst is the striped cucumber beetle. This handsome pest nests in the "blossom end" of the vine, and its offspring eat the leaves; and also carry a disease which may cause the vine to wilt and die before it bears. As soon as the plants emerge from the ground, begin dusting with rotenone, or with calcium arsenate mixed, 1 to 10, with gypsum. Since every day there will be new growth, dusting must be continued until the vines are several feet long, and safe from the beetle.

All the vine crops, cucumbers included, are extremely tender; being killed by frost and refusing to germinate in cold soil. Sow them after the ground is warm. If they are to spread on the ground, most gardeners sow them in hills, growing three plants to a hill; but they may also be spaced a foot apart in a row, provided at least three to four feet separates the rows. The vines can be kept in bounds by pinching off their growing ends, when they become too long.

SIMPLE FACTS ABOUT IRRIGATION

What time of day is best for watering vegetables and ornamental plants? Early morning watering is most beneficial for the plants. If applied before the sun is high, water soaks down into the rooting stratum and less is lost by surface evaporation. On the other hand, irrigation in the middle of the day or in early afternoon loses part of its value by direct evaporation of water before it reaches the roots.

What about evening irrigation? The chief danger here lies in excessive foliage moisture over night, with increased dangers from such diseases as mildews, leaf spots and other fungous ills which thrive where leaves and stems of plants are wet. Few mildews, for example, can gain entrance into a leaf whose surface is dry. The same is true of black-spot of roses and several other similar diseases.

Is a light application of water in dry weather better than no irrigation at all? Sprinklings or otherwise light waterings when the soil is dry are justified for but one reason—to revive wilting plants. Then a thorough soaking, as recommended above, should follow as soon as possible. The danger of light watering lies in the fact that such deficient supplies of moisture attract feeder roots toward the soil surface and there they are either injured or killed later by heat or dryness.

The answer to this depends somewhat on how deeply the particular plants root, also on the amount of top growth to sustain. But with most vegetable and ornamental plants the soil should be soaked to a depth of 6 inches at each watering. It is not safe to guess on this point. Better is the practice of using a spade or trowel to test the depth of penetrating moisture.

Newly Transplanted Trees Need Water

June can be a critical drought period, especially for newly transplanted trees and shrubs.

Valuable new plants, and even old ones, need abundant moisture, warns Urban L. Throm, area manager of the Davy Tree Expert company. If they dry out now, it may be difficult to bring them back to vigor.

There are warning signs for the home owner. If the grass becomes despite our suggestions that wetting plant foliage is unwise. Such systems afford the grower the equivalent of controlled rain, and when used in this scope he gains the enviable goal of almost complete insurance against drought. Too, overhead watering may be employed to eliminate the dangers of late spring or early fall frosts. In small home gardens open-furrow irrigation is highly recommended or any other simple method of distributing water so the soil is soaked to the depth already advised. A porous or otherwise perforated hose, large metal cans (10-gallon milk cans) or barrels or kegs with "leaks" in the bottoms, and similar measures may be used in this role. The main thing is to soak the soil whenever plants need more moisture.

One of the loveliest annual flowers is the Dianthus, the garden pink. In a well drained soil, the Dianthus Hedewig will bloom all summer. Its flowers range in color from deep red to white, and many have beautiful patterns of white, pink and red.

Nevada is known as the Sagebrush State and its official flower is the sagebrush.

450,000 COAL MINERS START LONG WALKOUT

Pittsburgh, June 13 (AP)—John L. Lewis' 450,000 coal miners began a week-long walkout today—but the United Mine Workers' chief kept working to get them more benefits. His plans may include a "share-the-work" system to give all miners about the same amount of work, and pay, when demand for coal is slack. "If we are going to starve in this industry at any time, we will just all starve together," he said at union convention last fall. He declared the available work would have to be shared.

In his walkout order last week he said some mines are going full blast while others work only a day or so a week.

They Followed Orders
The labor leader, who's in the habit of doing the unexpected, ordered the walkout as new contract discussions were underway with one segment of the industry—the Southern Coal Producers' association. He said the industry needs to be "stabilized."

As usual, the nearly half-million UMW dues payers did what their leader ordered—they stayed home. Lewis called the walkout under a provision of the contract which says the miners work only when "willing and able."

Walter R. Thurmond, secretary of the southern producers, said there's nothing in the contract to permit what Lewis describes as a "stabilizing period of inaction."

The UMW's present contract expires June 30. The miners are scheduled to resume work a week from today—then quit again on June 25 to start their annual 10-day paid vacations. They receive $100 apiece from the operators.

"No Contract, No Work"
If a new contract isn't signed by the time the men end their vacation they're not expected to return to work. The UMW has a traditional "no contract, no work" policy.

So far the UMW and the southern producers haven't made much progress in their contract talks which are slated to resume tomorrow at Bluefield, W. Va.

Today the UMW has scheduled another contract session at Philadelphia, it's with the U. S. Steel Corp. and will cover the 20,000 miners employed in "big steel's" mines.

Will Place Five Honor Plaques Today

Cooperstown, N. Y., June 13 (AP)—Five plaques were to be put in place today at the National Baseball Hall of Fame commemorating two heroes of olden days and three modern greats.

Honored were Mordecai Peter Brown and Charles A. (Kid) Nichols, pitchers from baseball's misty past, and Herbert J. Pennock, Charles L. Gehring, and Harold J. (Pie) Traynor of more recent times. Nichols and Brown were selected by the Old Timers' committee. Pennock and Traynor were voted in last year and Gehring this year, by the baseball writers.

Unveiling of the five plaques brought to 58 the number on display in the Hall of Fame.

TOWN'S WATER SUPPLY IN DOUBT

Hazleton, Pa., June 13—There may be water everywhere but men and women of Beaver Meadows wonder today whether any will flow through their spigots. Beaver Meadows is a borough of 3,600. It is located several miles from this eastern Pennsylvania anthracite region city.

Normally Beaver Meadows residents get their water from their own citizens water company. But the firm's reservoir ran dry Saturday and for six hours—no water.

A deal was made to tap—temporarily, over the week-end—a water pipe owned by the Hazleton water company.

But the Hazleton firm wants to get paid. It threatens to turn off the water if the citizens company does not pay some $5,000 Hazleton claims is owed.

DIPLOMATIC LINGO DROPPED BY ACHESON

Paris, June 13 (AP)—Dropping the silken language of diplomacy at least momentarily, Secretary of State Dean Acheson yesterday used homely American talk to describe a Russian proposal for a German peace treaty.

It is, Acheson declared, "as full of propaganda as a dog is of fleas."

"In fact," he added, "I think it is all fleas and no dog."

That was the way Acheson told off Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky at the close of a session of the council of foreign ministers. Western officials said almost the whole session was devoted to Russian propaganda appeals to the Germans.

Secret Session
The ministers later went into a secret session which American sources said was devoted largely to discussing the future course of the conference. The conferees decided not to meet today and to hold the next session tomorrow.

Vishinsky had proposed Friday that each of the four powers should submit drafts of a peace treaty to the Foreign Ministers council within three months. The draft would propose vide for withdrawal of occupation forces from Germany within a year after conclusion of the treaty. The proposal was the same as those made by the Russians at conferences in Moscow and London.

At yesterday's regular session, Vishinsky accused the west of not wanting a peace treaty. He also stressed the part of his proposal calling for withdrawal of troops from Germany.

400,000 Red Troops
The Russian declared the western powers have 400,000 troops in Germany as against 200,000 Soviet troops.

Acheson had said Friday the west had 240,000 men in Germany as compared with 340,000 Russians. Yesterday he told Vishinsky the west "knew it had 50 per cent less troops than Vishinsky said and that the west 'thought' Vishinsky underestimated the number of Russians in Germany."

Acheson told Vishinsky the public would judge by deeds, not words, which powers really want a peace treaty. He said Soviet actions in its occupation zone are not consistent with its expressed desires.

'DIRTIEST RIVER' MAY LOSE TITLE

Harrisburg, June 13 (AP)—"Pennsylvania's dirtiest river" is well on its way today toward losing its dubious title.

The pollution-ridden Schuylkill river, scene of one of the biggest stream cleanups in the world, already is displaying clear pools here and there where formerly was only inky blackness.

The huge multi-million dollar project is rounding the half-way mark and is scheduled for completion by mid-summer of 1951.

In a progress report, Milo F. Draemel, state forests and waters secretary, said nearly half of the $35,403,000 the state will spend on the waterway already has been allocated. The majority of the state work is concentrated between Norristown and Schuylkill county.

Started two years ago, the Commonwealth's project is designed to: 1. Reopen the use of the river for recreational purposes; 2. cut potential flood damage by the erection of a series of dams, and 3. improve the water quality for public and private use.

When the state has completed its share, the federal government is committed to spending another $20-

000,000 to $25,000,000 in cleaning up the river downstream from Norristown to Philadelphia.

BY PAUL EVAN LEHMAN

Chapter 11

He discovered the trap too late to avoid it. One glimpse he had of a strip of blue sky beyond the opening, then came the freezing realization that the trail dropped away to nothingness.

Red squealed in terror and squatted in a desperate effort to stop. His hoofs plowed furrows in the hard ground as his momentum carried him on. With a frightened squeal he went over the edge, and Jeff kicked free of his stirrups and flung himself backwards.

The rock his fingers closed on came loose and he fell, clawing at the hard smooth stone. He did not look down, but he had a glimpse of that awful depth as they went over and knew that the drop was at least a thousand feet.

He brought up so unexpectedly that he fell to his hands and knees. He had landed on a ledge so narrow that even now his left foot hung over its edge. There was a niche to his right and he threw himself into it and pressed against the hard rock until it hurt. The cold sweat broke out, and he huddled there rigidly without daring to move.

The reason one of those bullets hadn't hit him came to him as clearly as though it were in printed words for him to read. It wasn't poor shooting; it was exceptionally good shooting. They had driven him into the trap much as a wild horse is driven into a blind corral, forcing him on with their rifles, preventing his turning to right or left, careful not to mark him with a bullet. Very careful! A bullet hole would have been evidence of murder; a mangled body at the bottom of a thousand-foot cliff could only be the result of an accident.

He heard voices and movement above him. They seemed very close.

"See anything?"

"Naw. Yeah! Yeah! Down there through the trees. Hoss, ain't it?"

"Yeah. Can't see Tyler, but he must be somewhere around there—what's left of him."

"Thought I saw him jump just as he went over."

"He did jump; but it was too late. He went over, all right. Too bad, ain't it?" There was mockery in the voice.

"Yeah. Awful bad. You know, there oughta be a sign here at the jumpin'-off place to warn all snoopers like him."

They laughed callously and Jeff heard the crunch of their boots as they moved away from the edge of the cliff.

On his hands and knees he crawled out on the ledge, and now he saw that the edge over which he had fallen was not more than ten feet above his head when he stood erect. Ten feet, but it might just as well have been as many miles, for the rock face was eroded as smooth as glass. There was but one way out and that was by rope. And that meant somebody interested enough in his welfare to lower that rope and then drag him over the edge.

He cupped his hands and shouted more in desperation than in any hope of hearing a reply. Then he got up so suddenly that he nearly lost his balance and fell off the ledge. From the distance had come a faint answer.

He called again at the top of his lungs, and now he distinctly heard the carrying cry, "Jeff!" The pitch and timbre of that voice thrilled him to the toes.

Connie! I couldn't be Connie. He was going batty. Once more he shouted.

Presently he heard the hoofs of her pony above him, then the thud of her booted feet as she hit the hard ground. He saw her hand against the sky as she looked fearfully down at him.

He felt like singing. Instead he asked as calmly as he could, "Got a rope on your saddle?"

"Yes! Oh, Jeff, be careful! It's—" "I'm all right, Connie. Listen. Tie half a dozen knots in one end about two feet apart. Tie the other end to the horn and be sure the saddle's cinched on tight. Then let the knot-tied end down to me."

He heard her run back to her pony. There were a few minutes of silence while she worked; then she reappeared at the edge of the cliff and the rope came slithering down. He put his foot on the end.

"Take up the slack with your hands, then lead your pony away from the edge until I stop you."

She obeyed in silence and halted the pony at his call. He put his weight on the rope, raised himself from the ledge, took another handhold and a deep breath and started to climb. Short as was the distance, it seemed an eternity before he pulled himself over the edge and lay for a moment sweating it out. She ran to him and grasped an arm and tried frantically to drag him farther away. He panted that he was all right and staggered to his feet.

Her nerve broke then. "Oh, Jeff, I've been worried sick! I followed you and then lost you, and then I heard shooting, and—and—"

Sobbing hysterically, she threw herself into his arms, her hands clutching at his coat, her head buried against his breast. Jeff tenderly gathered her close and patted her shoulder, while his shining face was turned to the stars. He was thanking God, not for his miraculous escape, but for the memory of this moment that he could carry with him through the years.

Chapter 12

After a little while he led her to a cluster of stones and made her sit down; then he hunkered on his heels beside her, holding her hand until some of his own strength seemed to flow into her. She straightened and wiped the tears from her face and smiled tremulously.

"There, that's over, Jeff. I was never so scared in my life. That cliff is over a thousand feet high. We call it the 'jumping-off place.' What ever happened to you?"

He told her quietly, minimizing his danger as much as was possible.

"They intended to drive me over, of course, but I managed to land on that ledge. Poor Red; he's down at the bottom, dead."

"It was horrible! The ones that did it deserve killing!"

"They'll get their deserts if I ever run into them. But I don't know who they are, Connie; don't even know if they were Chuck's men or a bunch of those squatters who drive cattle up here. I didn't set eyes on one of them from start to finish. Now we'd better get out of here. Will your pony carry double?"

"She never has before, but she will if I want her to."

There was a light in the kitchen when they rode into the Crown yard, and as they quietly dismounted and came to the back door, Mrs. King opened it for them.

"Thank goodness you're back!" she exclaimed, and the strain of her vigil was in her voice. "Jeb wanted to know where you were and I told him you'd be late and I'd sit up for you."

He let Connie tell the story, and as she progressed he saw the anger kindle in Mrs. King's eyes. "It's the most cowardly thing I've ever heard tell of," she declared. "Jeb must hear about it as soon as he gets up. Now you two rest while I fix you some breakfast."

They had hardly finished when Jeb came into the kitchen. He stared at them in astonishment.

They told the story to him while he ate, and when he had heard the whole of it he got up and went outside and they heard him calling to his foreman. There was a deal of activity at the corrals and shortly thereafter Jeb re-entered the kitchen.

"Got a horse all rigged for you, Jeff. Reckon you'd better come along and lead us to that park . . . You women go to bed. There'll be no danger; the Crown has twelve men to Chuck's six."

Jeff followed him outside to find ten grim cowboys armed and mounted. Jeb took the rein of a handsome gelding from one of them and handed it to Jeff. "Here's an extra nag we've been feedin', Jeff. Take him and welcome."

The sun was high when they reached the place. The Crown men were prepared for action, their rifles over their knees; but there came no interfering shot, no challenge, and Jeff himself led the way into the fissure in the rock wall.

The narrow passage twisted and turned, but the trail was much used and gave evidence that cattle had recently passed over it. He made a final turn and emerged in a circular basin. There were about a hundred head of cattle grazing there.

The party halted and Jeff rose in his stirrups to let his gaze roam about the basin. Hope died a quick death. He saw duns and browns and red, but not a single whiteface. He looked at Jeb and shook his head. The Herefords were not here.

"Let's have a look at those brands," said Jeb.

Every animal wore the big Circle C of Chuck Gale.

Reluctantly they rode back into the valley. Jeff left them at the junction of the trails and set out for the homestead, his heart heavy within him. His head was lowered in gloomy thought as he reached the gate; then the bawl of a cow snapped him erect. He stared unbelievably. Along the newly erected fence were six of his whitefaces. One of them had its neck through the wires cropping at the grass within. He recognized it with a triumphant yell. It was his Hereford bull!

He looked quickly about, his face glowing. Over to his left he saw four more of them; a little distance beyond, three more. He leaped from his saddle and swung wide the gate, then took his rope and cut behind the ones at the fence. They moved slowly ahead of him and turned into the gateway, trotting toward the water hole as though glad to be home.

Jeff's whole outlook on life was abruptly changed. He whistled as he cooked dinner. He wanted to ride to the Crown and tell Connie, but decided to postpone that until later. This was Saturday and he hadn't seen Glenn since the early part of the week. He decided to ride to Cougar that evening and learn how the boy was making out with his new office.

Jeff reached Cougar around six. But Glenn was not at home and the stable was empty; evidently he had not been able to get away from his office at Briscoe as early as was usual. Certain that his brother would arrive before very long, Jeff went about preparing supper for the two of them; but when eight o'clock came and no Glenn, he went ahead with the meal alone.

Chapter 13

As Jeff pushed back his chair he heard a knock on the kitchen door.

"Who is it?"

"John Stover."

He opened the door and the town marshal came in. "Gleason not home?"

Jeff explained that Glenn hadn't returned from Briscoe. "Come in and have some supper," he invited.

"Thanks; I might at that." Stover entered and sat down at the place Jeff had fixed for Glenn. They ate a while in silence, then Stover spoke.

"I been lookin' for Gleason the best part of the week. Never seem to find him home. There's a couple points I got to get straight about that Tolson shootin'."

"What points?"

"Well, Sam's position, for one. Seems kinda funny that Bud Snyder should find powder marks around the wound."

"I can explain that. I heard about the powder marks and asked Glenn about it. Sam wasn't in the doorway; he'd just got a gun from the table by the bunk and handed it to Glenn. He took a step or two towards the door and Glenn could see him against the light outside. It was dark in the cabin, and it looked as though Sam was standing in the doorway, but in reality he was only five or six feet from the window. Slug probably just pushed his gun through the pane and let him have it. That way the muzzle of the gun wouldn't be much more than two feet from Sam's head."

"And right close to Gleason's," added the marshal dryly.

"It was. He said it was."

"Hm-m. Might be the way you say."

"Anything else?"

"Yes. The gold. It disappeared, and Gleason was alone with Sam while the others ran up on the oenah. And Gleason knew Sam had it, for he played poker with him nearly every night."

This was news to Jeff, but he hid his surprise. "At the cabin?"

"No. At Mike Pacheco's place across the street. Played a right stiff game, too. One of the boys that sat in with him said Gleason musta dropped six, seven hundred dollars in a couple nights."

Jeff mentally stiffened. There was nothing to say to this except to deny it, and that would be foolish without first talking with Glenn. But he was sure the one who told Stover this must have exaggerated.

Glenn didn't have six or seven hundred dollars to lose to begin with.

Unless—

He felt a slow anger kindle within him. If Glenn had lied to him when he said he was broke, if he had gambled away the money Jeff had worked so hard to provide him with—

The marshal went on. "But that ain't all that's puzzlin' me." He shoved a knife of beans into his mouth, chewed energetically, then washed them down with a swallow of coffee. "Gleason emptied his gun through the window at Slug, accordin' to his story. Now there were five fired cartridges in that gun. The fellers seen him punch 'em out while he told them the story, and he borrowed five fresh ones to reload it with. That means he fired five shots. But if Slug shot Sam, he musta fired a shot, too. That makes six shots in all. Of all the fellers that heard those shots, only one of 'em had sense enough to count 'em. And he only counted five."

"Meaning just what?"

"Well, if only five shots were fired, and Glenn fired all of them, Slug didn't shoot Sam."

"Which is the same as saying that Glenn did." Cold anger stirred in Jeff, but he spoke calmly enough.

"The fellow was mistaken; or one of those cartridges could have been fired by Sam before he gave the gun to Glenn."

"Maybe," said Stover, but Jeff could see that he was skeptical.

"Look here, John; if you're trying to pin Sam's murder on Glenn, you might as well forget it. The boy had no motive for killing Sam. Slug did. It was common knowledge that Slug intended to get Sam, and there isn't any doubt that he was in the gulch and that he'd left his horse on the bench."

"That's what Gleason says. Nobody else seen that horse."

"But it wasn't Gleason who shot at the men who ran up there! Gosh, man, you're stubborn. Then Glenn didn't know where Sam kept his gold; if Slug was watching the place, as we're pretty certain he was, he could have seen Sam put it in that cigar box. And I found out that Slug could get the dust out of that box by stretching his arm through the broken window. If you don't believe me, go down there and try it yourself."

Stover pushed back his chair and got to his feet. "Well, you sure make out a fine case for Gleason. You ought to be the lawyer instead of him. I'll drop in some other time and talk to Gleason; meanwhile I got a couple other hunches to follow up. Thanks for the meal. I'll be seein' you."

He went out and Jeff heard the

SAY ERP ENTERS CRITICAL STAGE IN WASHINGTON

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington, June 13 (AP)—State department officials say the European recovery program is now entering a critical stage of development, with its ultimate success at stake.

These authorities noted today the program must meet a heavy strains not only in Congress, where it is caught up in the battle over government costs, but also in Europe where extremely difficult economic problems are shaping up.

President Truman brought the Washington side of the situation sharply into national attention Saturday with his Little Rock War Memorial speech. He denounced a "false economy" any reduction by Congress of funds which the Economic Cooperation administration (ECA) is asking for the second full year of the Marshall Plan.

A Key Element

After emphasizing that he regards European Recovery as a key element in his anti-Communist foreign policy, Mr. Truman said that a slash in funds now would wreck the recovery already achieved, would "cancel the hopes and plans of the European nations" and would "be a great gain for Communism."

(Senate Appropriations committee leaders said following the President's speech they intended to go through with plans to trim several hundred thousand dollars from the $4,000,000,000 the ECA is asking for European recovery next year.)

The President linked his ECA fight to a basic warning to the American people against slackening their support of the home team in the cold war just when things look better. In this connection he also urged Congressional action on the Atlantic pact and the military aid program for western European and other "free nations."

Only Half Finished

"We are only halfway in carrying out our policy," Mr. Truman said. "We have a long way to go before we can make the free world secure against the social and political evils on which Communism thrives. The cause of peace and freedom is still threatened."

State department officials report a tendency in the country to slow down action on foreign issues and switch attention to domestic questions except in periods of tremendous world concern. They say this is even true in cases where billions of taxpayer's dollars are committed to a foreign purpose such as European recovery.

thud of his boots in the alley. For ten, fifteen seconds he stood there, turning over in his mind the questions that Stover had raised. He was still a bit stunned at the knowledge that Glenn had been playing poker for big stakes.

And then the evening quiet was shattered by a shot. It came from the direction of the alley and sounded only a short distance away.

He opened the kitchen door and stood looking up the dark alley, then went out and started toward the point from whence the shot had come. He saw a dark figure enter the alley from the direction of the street, and a moment later a match flared in the darkness. He broke into a run, noticing that the man who had struck the match was bending over looking at something on the ground.

He was lying on his face. Jeff leaned over and turned him, knowing as he did so who it was. The man beside him sucked in his breath.

"Holy smoke! It's John Stover."

"By jacks! Slug swore he'd get him, and he sure did!"

COPLON CALLS FOR APOLOGY FROM FBI HEAD

By KARL R. BAUMAN

Washington, June 13 (AP)—Angry denials—one coupled with a doubled demand for an apology from J. Edgar Hoover—boiled today in the wake of publication of secret reports from FBI files.

Thirty such reports, all relating to internal security matters and to suspected espionage agents, have been introduced in evidence in Judith Coplon's trial on espionage charges. The reports quote "informants" identified only by code numbers.

The repeated demand for an apology came from Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the Federal Bureau of Standards, whose wife was mentioned in one of the reports. She was said by an informant to have arranged a "contact" between a business man and a suspected Russian agent.

No Comment from Hoover

"Who attacks my wife must take me on," Condon said in a first statement. "Mr. J. Edgar Hoover owes her a personal apology. I hope he is man enough to deliver."

Hoover, director of the FBI, maintained silence. Through an aide, he said he had "no comment to make on anything coming out of the Coplon trial."

That aroused Condon again. "I do not choose to accept 'no comment' for an answer," he said in a Sunday statement.

He said that under FBI procedures "gossip, rumor, and hearsay are gathered from witnesses of unknown integrity or veracity—witnesses who, moreover, are never asked to face those whom they slander and whose very identities are kept secret."

The statement continued: "What this means is simply this: That any American can be slandered, his name ruined, his career blasted by any other person who chooses to relay malicious gossip to the FBI."

If the FBI is after facts, Condon suggested it should question him and his wife. "This they have not done."

The FBI reports got into the espionage trial of Miss Coplon, 28, former Justice Department political analyst, over the vigorous objection of her prosecutors. They argued that publication of the FBI's secret files involved national security.

Interstate League

(By The Associated Press)
The well-balanced Wilmington Blue Rocks continued to dominate the Interstate league with a doubleheader sweep yesterday (Sunday) that increased their first-place edge to 5 1/2 games.

Jack Britten and Bill Fogg both went the pitching route as Wilmington turned back cellar-dwelling Sunbury by 3-1 and 4-1 scores.

Ralph Vasquez, Sunbury's Puerto Rican righthander, pitched scoreless ball for seven innings but then threw a home run ball to Ernie Woods in the eighth when the Blue Rocks picked up all their opening game runs. Fogg scattered eight hits to take the nightcap.

Meanwhile, second-place Trenton split a twin bill with Harrisburg, winning the opener 16-4 and dropping the afterpiece 6-0. Spud Murray tossed a five-hit shutout for fourth-place Harrisburg and faced only 25 men in the abbreviated seven-inning nightcap. It was the fourth victory for Harrisburg in the current five-game series with Trenton.

Third-place Lancaster came up with two pitchers who could go the distance and copped both ends of a doubleheader with York, 10-4 and 6-5. Red Sweeney and Mike Munsinger, a pair of righthanders, did the hurling jobs for the winners. Hagerstown tripped Allentown, 14 to 5 in a single in which Allentown pitchers handed out 16 walks.

The first locomotive built in America for actual common-carrier service was "The Best Friend of Charleston," which made its first trip in 1831. On the first run, the engine fell into a ditch but held the rails on later attempts.

TREASURY LIST SHOWS INCOMES

Washington, June 13 (AP)—It's commencing to look like earning a million dollars a year—much less keeping that much after taxes—is a thing of the past, at least if you work for a corporation.

Comparatively few people ever did make that much and no one it appeared from Treasury records to-day, has been able to get that much pay out of a company since mid-war 1944, when film producer Leo McCarey was credited with $1,113,035 for 12 months' efforts.

A new Treasury list shows America's best paid corporation employee in 1947 (of fiscal years ending prior to 1948) got $810,000—$175,300 less than he got to be No. 1 the previous year also. The list showed salaries as they stood before payment of heavy taxes.

The top man, and it's his third straight year as such, is Greek-born Charles P. Skouras, president of National Theatres Amusement company, Inc., and of Fox West Coast Agency Corp.

The top salaried woman for 1947 was movie star Betty Grable, although the $209,000 listed for her was a $91,333 comedown from her earnings the previous year. Miss Grable has been among the leading women earners for three years.

Manheim, Pa., June 13 (AP)—The congregation of Zion Evangelical Lutheran church has paid its annual debt of "one red rose" to a descendant of William Henry Stiegel, its Colonial landlord.

Mrs. Elizabeth Van T. Dannehower, of Westfield, N. J., received the flower—the church's annual germinal— from Dr. Henry S. Borneman of Philadelphia.

The payment carried out at the annual "Festival of the Roses," was in accordance with the terms under which Stiegel provided a site for the church in 1772.

In accepting the rose from Dr. Borneman, president of the Pennsylvania German society—the church's chosen representative of the legal profession—Mrs. Dannehower said she wished Stiegel "could see how well the debt has been paid."

Dr. Borneman said the payment "is more than an obligation—it is a matter of fidelity which this congregation pledged to Stiegel." Stiegel was a famed Colonial ironmonger and glassmaker.

The Rev. Harry H. Bagger, pastor of Trinity Lutheran church, Lancaster, Pa., delivered the annual memorial address. He called Stiegel as a man of iron, saying "it took a will of iron to rise up and go forth across the waters to find a place in the new world."

4,500 TURKEYS BURN
Norristown, Pa., June 13 (AP)—Fire burned down a three-story cement-block brooder today and destroyed 4,500 turkeys. The fire at the L. W. Steelman Poultry farm on Valley Forge road was visible for miles as flames shot 100 feet into the air. A motorist's insistent horn-blowing awakened Steelman and his wife, Gertrude, who called firemen.

City Patrolman Michael McCool who was riding in a police car. He trailed Manka's car to a dead end street where the soldier stopped and then pumped a bullet through his left temple. He died instantly.

Asks Public Backing On Farm Program

Des Moines, June 13 (AP)—Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan called today for public support of Truman Administration farm policies to help prevent the "greatest economic crash in history."

America's farm productive power, he said, is like atomic energy—it can be used for either good or bad.

But the nation need not fear this power, the cabinet officer said, if it supports the Democratic party. That party, he added, has been the only one in history to support "effective farm programs" aimed at serving the whole country.

Brannan made this bid for continued support of his party in a speech prepared for a two-day mid-western Democratic conference to lay plans for 1950 Congressional campaigns in a 16-state farm belt area that contributed heavily to Mr. Truman's victory last year.

Probably it will be several weeks before the investigators—members and the staff of the House—American Activities committee—are ready to release the report. It still is after some of the information to go in it, information relating to atomic espionage, for instance, on which more hearings are planned this week.

Goes Back To "22"
Committee officials say they can back track on Red spying to at least 1922. They say they have information that the Russian appropriated some money that year and set up some sort of international organization.

They expect to trace the routes along which the espionage network spread. One of the first places it was pulled into the open, they say, was in a case that broke in England in 1927, a case now pretty well forgotten.

The committee still is trying to fill out its story of wartime efforts of Red agents to steal the secret of the atom bomb.

Tomorrow or Wednesday it plans to question Frank Oppenheimer and his wife in hopes they can help build up the chapter about a Red cell which allegedly operated in the radiation laboratory at the University of California at Berkeley.

Committee authorities said Oppenheimer now is at the University of Minnesota but that he was a scientist for a while during the war at the atomic research center at Berkeley. His brother, J. Robert Oppenheimer, one of the key figures in perfecting the bomb, also was stationed at Berkeley for a time. The committee questioned him last week.

Mrs. Elizabeth Van T. Dannehower, of Westfield, N. J., received the flower—the church's annual germinal— from Dr. Henry S. Borneman of Philadelphia.

The payment carried out at the annual "Festival of the Roses," was in accordance with the terms under which Stiegel provided a site for the church in 1772.

In accepting the rose from Dr. Borneman, president of the Pennsylvania German society—the church's chosen representative of the legal profession—Mrs. Dannehower said she wished Stiegel "could see how well the debt has been paid."

Dr. Borneman said the payment "is more than an obligation—it is a matter of fidelity which this congregation pledged to Stiegel." Stiegel was a famed Colonial ironmonger and glassmaker.

The Rev. Harry H. Bagger, pastor of Trinity Lutheran church, Lancaster, Pa., delivered the annual memorial address. He called Stiegel as a man of iron, saying "it took a will of iron to rise up and go forth across the waters to find a place in the new world."

4,500 TURKEYS BURN
Norristown, Pa., June 13 (AP)—Fire burned down a three-story cement-block brooder today and destroyed 4,500 turkeys. The fire at the L. W. Steelman Poultry farm on Valley Forge road was visible for miles as flames shot 100 feet into the air. A motorist's insistent horn-blowing awakened Steelman and his wife, Gertrude, who called firemen.

IGNORANCE OF COMMUNISM IS NOT THE ANSWER

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(AP Foreign Affairs Analyst)
Educational developments sometimes get lost in the shuffle of world events but we shouldn't overlook the importance of the positive stand taken by twenty of America's outstanding educators regarding the teaching about Communism in our schools.

These educators—who include General Dwight Eisenhower, president of Columbia University and Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard, have given in effect this verdict:

The principles of Communism should be taught—but not advocated—in American schools. Communists should be barred from the teaching profession.

These obviously highly contro-

Thraves, police said, was employed as a flagman at the temporary crossing where the three roads intersect, and where barriers had been erected to keep motorists from using the new highway. Shoop had finished work at Cashtown and was driving west toward his home. Police said he struck the barricade and Thraves was knocked down, and was found by five York youths en route home from the mountains. Thomas Saylor, 17, of York, was the driver of the car. They took him to the Chambersburg hospital.

versal views were contained in a report prepared by an educational commission appointed by the National Education Association and the American Association of school administrators. The purpose of the commission was to study teaching changes which might be advisable in view of political tensions.

When President Truman was questioned about this report at his Washington news conference he said he figured the educators know their field best. However, he did think that young minds should not be taught by people who advocate the overthrow of the government of the United States.

The point is, of course, that a teacher can impart information objectively about Communism, or any other ism, without advocating it. Objectively, therefore, is the key to be he problem, as this column has been insisting.

Must Face the Issue

There has been widespread anxiety in this country about a discussion of Communism in our schools, and my observation is that most of it has been due to fear that presentation of the subject might be accompanied by advocacy. And of course there has been advocacy in some cases. However, I have noted specific instances where objective presentation worked exceedingly well.

The ideological complexion of our country a dozen years hence may well depend on the manner in which the current educational program is handled. We certainly can't solve our problem by hiding under a barrel. We must get out and face the issue.
